SEC Sues In Insider 'Network'

London Trader Charged in Deals Worth $4 Million

By Warren Getler al Herald Tribun LONDON - A senior director of the London office of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith was charged Wednesday by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission with organizing a major illicit insider-trading network on Wall Street.

The move broadened the SEC's crackdown on insider trading to include, for the first time, financial figures outside the United States. The SEC, in a civil suit filed in U.S. federal court in New York, alleged that Nahum Vaskevitch used privileged information in stock trading that generated more than $4 million in profits for himself and others involved in the insider network.

The suit did not allege impropri eties or financial gain by Merrill Lyncb itself or any of its other employees, nor did it allege that any illegal actions had involved British financial institutions, and it was not clear whether British laws had been violated.

An SEC official in washington said the Vaskevitch case is unrelated to the agency's widening investi-gation into Wall Street's insider trading scandal involving Ivan F. Boesky, West Berlin's two million citizens enjoy Western freedoms even though they live 110 miles (about 180 kilometers) inside East Germany. The allies have spent 40 years carefully preserving the enclave's legal rights based on postwar agreements with the Soviet Union.

PARIS - The Vatican's condemnation of artificial procreation bas disappointed and confused many medical specialists, particularly those belonging to the Roman Catholic Church, and brought sharply differing reactions from theologians.

Responses to the 40-page "In-struction an Respect for Human Life in Its Origins and on the Dignity of Procreation" were varied after the document was released Tuesday. "The document argues that a child can be born only from a sexual act," said the Reverend Richard A. McCormick, a professor of Christian ethics at the University of Notre Dame and one of the United States's leading Catholic authorities on biomedical ethics.

"The most that can be argued is that a child should be born within a marriage from a loving act," Father McCormick told The New York Times. "Sexual intercourse is not the only loving act."

The Reverend William Gallagher, president of the Pope John Center, a biomedical institute in Braintree, Massachusetts, praised the Vatican document as a "ringing affirmation of the dignity of the human person from the moment of fertilization to the last moment of

Soviet Shift Reported on Short-Range Arms Stance

By Robert J. McCartney gton Post Servi

BONN - The Soviet Union appears to have toughened its position on limiting short-range nucle-ar missiles in Europe, threatening to make it more difficult to reach an agreement on medium-range missiles, diplomatic sources said

Wednesday. Although the Soviet position is unclear, it appeared that Moscow wanted talks on medium-range weapons to be kept separate, the sources said. Soviet negotiators used that approach at the Geneva talks Tuesday and Wednesday, the sources said.

The Soviet position that was outlined at the lociand summit meet-ing in October allowed for the inclusion of some restraints on shortrange weapons in the medium-range talks. The United States and its European allies have insisted that an agreement on medium-range arms must also limit short-range missiles, where the Soviets have a sizable advantage.

The Soviets proposed at the meeting in Reykjavik that both sides should freeze short-range missile arsenals at current levels. then negotiate reductions.

That was unacceptable to the United States, because Washington wants to preserve the right to match the Soviet arsenals. But the Soviet Union accepted the principle that a medium-range pact should include limits on shortrange systems, and that position is the one that apparently has been changed now.

The North Atlantic Treaty Orga-nization has agreed that the elimination of medium-range missiles, envisioned in the draft treaty being discussed in Geneva, must not ex-pose NATO to Soviet short-range weapons.

What the Soviets have said this stopped the police in Johannesburg week seems to indicate that it is a from impounding copies of The Star that contained the ad, in modistep backward," a diplomat said.

On the Democratic side, with the decision of Governor Mano M.

Cuomo of New York not to seek nomination, the former Colorado senator Gary Hart added in his lead. His support among Democrats grew : from 39 percent in January to 46 percent now, the poll showed. The Reverend Jesse L. Jackson remained relatively steady at 14 percent. No other Democrat had more than 4 percent support in the nationwide poll of 1,511 people, conducted March 5-9.

The poll showed that Mr. Bush had the support of 47 percent of Republicans, up 12 percentage points from January, while Mr. Dole, the Senate minority leader, had the support of 26 percent, up 6. Mr. Bushbenefited the most from Mr. Baker's decision to become White Honse chief of staff rather than seek the Republican nomination. Mr. Baker had the support of 13 percent of Republicans in the January survey.

Rights Panel Rebuffs U.S. on Cuba

GENEVA (Renters) - The United Nations Human Rights Commission rejected on Wednesday an attempt by the United States to subject Cuba to special scrutiny for alleged abuses of fundamental freedoms By a 19-18 vote, the commission endorsed an Indian motion to shelve a U.S. resolution expressing deep concern over alleged housing inghts violations, directing Cuba to respond to the allegations and calling on it to releast all its political priceness.

to release all its political prisoners. There were six abstentions. In the final week of its annual six-week session in Geneva, the commission also voted 17-15 to take no action on a rival draft by Cuba' alleging oppression of Indian, black and Puerto Rican communities in the United Sta ates. There were 11 abstentions.

U.S. human rights officials said there were about 15,000 political prisoners in Cuba, although no figure was named in the resolution

Plane Dropped Drugs, Honduras Says

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (UPI) - Honduran Air Force officials said Wednesday that suspected drug traffickers were aboard the cargo plane that was shot down on Monday as it flew over Honduran territory. Three persons were reported killed in the crash, Military officials said the DC-3 was shot down when the pilot refused to identify himself or land near the Salvadoran border about 100 miles (160 kilometers) west of Tegncigalpa.

They said that no drugs, arms or other cargo were uncovered in the vreckage, but that said drugs were dropped from the plane in mid-flight.

East Germans Begin AIDS Campaign

Azence France-Press BERLIN -- East Germany has begun a major information cam-paign against AIDS, and its broadeasting media is being used for the first time to warn of the dangers of infection by virus. The campaign, which breaks sev-eral social prohibitions, was started on Tuesday by Radio Youth, a pop music station created last year. An expert on infectious diseases from an East Berlin hospital, Renate Baumgarten, gave detailed descriptions of homosexual practices and described how those practices may lead to contracting AIDS. She also explained how condoms should be used and warned against sexual promiscuity.

According to West German specialists, condoms made in Eastern Europe are of poor quality and do not guarantee total protection.

For the first time, AIDS was also discussed on East German Television on Tuesday in a live, call-in discussion between specialists and the public.

One of the specialists, Professor Niels Sonnichsen, head of the dermatology department at Charity Hospital in East Berlin, said on the program that one person had died of the disease in East Germany and said Wednesday that it would reek oew loans and a rescheduling of its foreign debt after the devastating earthquakes last week that interrupted oil exports.

What is happening in our country cannot be compared to any oth-er time," said Finance Minister Demingo Cordovez. "It is the worst economic crisis."

Ten earthquakes and aftershocks struck Thursday night through Friday afternoon. The strongest regis-tered 6.8 on the open-ended Richter scale.

The Red Cross said Wednesday that it believed more than 300 people were killed and 4,000 are missing in the earthquakes and resulting mudslides. More than 90,000 families were affected, and the trans-Andean oil pipeline was ruptured.

Even before the earthquakes, Ecuador's economy was deeply troubled. The country signed a mul-tiyear debt rescheduling agreement in December 1985 that covered virtually all its debt to commercial banks worldwide.

Because oil accounts for up to two-thirds of Ecuador's exports and as much as 60 percent of government revenues, the sharp drop in oil prices last year put the agreement in jeopardy even before the earthquakes hit.

In January, Ecuador stopped paying the interest, estimated at $920 million annually, on its $8.2 billion foreign debt. The country sought a rescheduling of its paymeots of principal, semianoual payments of interest instead of quarterly payments and a lowering of interest rates. Ecuador subsequently missed January and February interest payments.

Officials said the suspension of QUITO, Ecuador - Ecuador oil exports, caused by the destruction of the pipeline in the earthquakes, would cost the country $370 million during the emergency. Ecuador will "need a global renegotiation of its debt service since the country will not be able to export oil for four or live months," said Alberto Dahik, economic adviser to President Léon Febres Cordero, in a television interview. "We have to seek an additional arrangement," he said, "since the proposals presented to the international banks on this year's pay-ments on the debt are not viable."

He said Ecuador would ask its creditors for a rescheduling of its payments "and additional resources from the international financial system."

In a televised speech Monday night, Mr. Febres Cordero said be would ask for official loans from an unspecified international development organization and other nations to offset the millions in lost oil exports and oil pipeline repairs. He asked Ecuador's 12 fellow embers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries ments. Ecuador, he said, would repay them in oil when it was able to resume exports.

Colombia outlined a plan Tuesday to pump 30,000 barrels of Ecuadoran crude a day through its pipeline system for export. Colombia also pledged to supply 225,000 barrels for Ecuador's domestic use.

Venezuela said it would deliver five million barrels to Ecuador for internal use, and sources said it was Germans by encouraging them to considering supplying oil to Ecua-spell out the conditions under dor's foreign elients. Ecuador uses the trip in October. about 100,000 barrels of oil daily.

WASHINGTON - Democrats in the House of Representatives have unveiled sweeping trade legislation that attempts to crack down on unfair foreign trade practices by requiring the president to retaliate. But in a concession to the Reagan administration, the proposal, put forward Tuesday, would give the president the option to refuse to take action if he believed that any counterretaliation that might be triggered would be more harmful to the United States than the original trading offense.

And Tuesday he announced that he would try to make good on his promise by reintroducing legislation to restore to the Sioux 1.3 million acres (530,000 hectares) of Black Hills land that the courts have determined were illegally wrested by President Ulys-ses S. Grant under threat of starvation.

"Bill Bradley came there and we to get the land back. In 1974, the all met him when he was a basketball player," recalled Charlotte A. It was from the tribal matriarch and others that Mr. Bradley learned that the Lakotas, which is the true name of the Sioux, called the land "wamakas og naka i'cante."

The approximately 100,000 Sioux, who stood to gain at least $1 million apiece, were split over the issue, but leaders prevailed, saying they did not want the money, but the land itself. But the Indian Land Claims Commission has no authority to

MILAN - Romeo Gigli is clearly Gigli made jacket emerging as the man of the season pered pants from it. here. His collection Wednesday for Callaghan drew record crowds and mobs of photographers. Gigli said that he always designs for the same woman. However, Callaghan was a more commercial job than his main line and it was addressed to a wider audience. Colors were less severe, with bright patches of poison green, orange, purple and salmon. Fabrics - tweeds, paisleys, wool, laces and jerseys - were more understandable. The shapes were less severe, more adult.

Accessories, notably jewelry, were plentiful. This collection also harked back to Gigli's last season, when he was still influenced by the Japanese. There was also a strong tribal feeling in this collection, with stacks of African jewelry, particularly the silver bangles and pins worn by Tunisian farmers in the fields.

The textures were often rustic and primal -especially the loosely woven sweaters over draped peasant skirts. Colors had the flat look of vegetable dye.

Some skirts, embroidered with colorful motifs, were right out of Peruvian folklore, while sari-draped ones came from India, Gigli has a passion for ethnic clothes.

The show opened with a striking paisley jacket made from an antique Persian shawi, similar to those worn by rich women at the wrn of the century. The paisley motif was picked up again midway through the collection, but it was not the real thing any more.

Soft, comfortable pantsuits were worn under equally comfortable trencb coats. Long, collariess, flared dresses looked slightly clerical and were worn with clerical, widebrimmed hats. The low-waisted silhouette was a favorite with long jackets over full skirts or long-busted dresses finished with a low flounce.

Colors were civilized, soft pastels and the no-surprise fabrics included quality stuff such as mohair and camel's hair.

No to an SDI Stampede

Something looks very wrong with the management of President Reagan's "star wars" missile defense program. Instead of clear and steady progress toward establish-ing its technological feasibility, the program's managers seem to shift emphasis every lew months from one vaunted breakthrough to another. Last year the free-electron laser was bot stuff; now attention veers to crash development of space-based rockets. The primary goal seems political: get-ting production lines running before Mr. Reagan leaves office. That goal collides with any kind of orderly technical progress. These shifts, says Gerold Yonas, the program's former chief scientist, "make you wonder if this country is capable of running a big long-term program." Star wars' near-est equivalent was the Manhattan Project, to build an atomic bomb. But that bad a clear goal, the best available technical advice and expert management. Star wars lacks these advantages and responds less to a clear need than to a presidential vision.

Mr. Reagan's stated goal of a leakproof shield against Soviet ballistic missiles is widely regarded as either impossible or cost-ineffective measured against likely improvements in offenses. While other goals like defense of missile sites have been discussed, the administration has not defined an alternative. The Manhattan Project enjoyed the full support of America's most talented physicists. Star wars has deeply divided the physicists. The highly capable nuclear weapons laboratories at Livermore, Los Alamos and Sandia are working on star wars projects, but these scientists are among the leading critics of the program's management. The repeated change in priorities "does not aid the cause of serious, stable research," William Barletta of Livermore has told The New York Times.

The head of the star wars office, General James Abrahamson, has paid attention to the public relations side of his program, perhaps a necessary task but one that has also drawn justifiable criticism. Star wars experiments like destruction of a Titan missile casing by a laser have been viewed by some scientists as stunts inimical to progress. General Abrahamson has told Con-gress of the "incredible pace" at which breakthroughs are being made. Yet the pro-gram's present emphasis on immediately deployable systems resembles an approach rejected early on as too unambitious.

There are cogent reasons to support vigorous research on anti-missile defenses. The overriding one is as a hedge against Soviet research. A solid program also maintains pressure on the Soviet Union in a field of U.S. advantage. For any of these reasons, an effective program of long-term research makes sense. A bectic publicity exercise designed to stampede Congress into premature deployment makes none at all.

Renault Goes Home

Chrysler's agreement to buy American Motors resolves two pressing questions. The strategic question for Chrysler bad been how to expand, and to maintain its momentum, in a crowded automobile market; American Motors will now bring to Chrysler the Jeep, the predominant name among specialized four-wheel-drive vehicles. For Renault the question was simpler and harsher: In the eight years since it became American Motors' principal owner, the venture has lost money beavily. Even Renault, owned by the French government, could not afford that forever, Rather than continue this expensive attempt to establish itself in North America, Renault has decided to devote its resources to strengthening its position at home in Europe,

This takeover will not change the structure of the industry significantly, but it gives an illuminating indication of the way the industry is --- and is not --- developing. A decade ago it seemed likely that automobile manufacturing would consolidate into perhaps 10 or a dozen very big companics operating worldwide. It also seemed that most of them would be producing what was known, in a phrase of the time, as a world car" - a basic design capable of being built and sold, with only minor local variations, in almost any country. Things are going otherwise. The predicted consolidation has not happened. And while many powerful companies now compete to provide the cars that the world regards as basic transportation, they do it in the somber knowledge that the world's industry is already greatly overbuilt; it has the capacity to produce far more cars than it can sell. That increases manufacturers' interest in special models, such as the Jeep, that command small but highly stable and profitable niches of their own in the market.

Renault's departure is another in a series of failures by Europeans to compete successfully in the United States except among the most expensive cars. Volkswagen was a brilliantly successful pioneer in the 1950s and '60s. It continues to do well, but its present sales fall far short of its hopes then. The import market that it foresaw has largely been taken over by the Japanese. Renault's decision to pick up its marbles and go home will mean that, in the price ranges in which most people buy cars, the big European companies are not going to be a significant factor in the United States. More than ever, it will be the Japanese who keep the American market competitive.

of the United States "to support free peoples who are resisting attempted subjugation by armed minorities or by outside pressures." This universalization of America's role was immediately called the Truman doctrine. With it, "containment" was born. The Monroe doctrine had pledged the United States to keep foreign powers out of the Western Hemisphere. The Truman doctrine pledged it to contain Soviet power and preserve freedom wherever it could around the world. When the speech ended, said a witness, Congress's "applause had a bewildered quality about it." Initial reviews were not all favorable. In the end, however, Truman won. By May 15 the aid was approved by both houses of Congress. The Truman doctrine saved Greece and Turkey. Coupled on June 5 with the Marshall plan, it saved the rest of Western Europe. The Truman doctrine was the guiding principle of U.S. foreign policy for a generation

As Joshua Muravchik points out in the winter - collapses, giving way to a new policy vis-a-vis the Soviet Union: selective containment. Some countries America will support against Soviet-backed forces, others not. In the late 70s, for example, Washington said no to Angola and yes to El Salvador. There is one problem with selective containment. Alone, it is a policy of communal retreat. If the Soviets gain a footbold in, say, Angola, they keep it. The Brezhnev doctrine, enforced by Moscow, pledges that Soviet advances will not be reversed. Selective containment plus the Brezhnev doctrine means: What's theirs is theirs and what's ours is up for grabs. The fight is always on Western terrain. The strategic response to this asymmetry has come to be called the Reagan doctrine. It says . that recent Soviet acquisitions at the periphery of empire - Angola, Afghanistan, Nicaragua

- are not permanent. They are open to chal-lenge. And America supports the challenge. The Reagan doctrine declares overt (Oliver, Selective contain-ment of the Reason doctrine meet if Inday. ment and the Reagan doctrine meet if today.

The Reagan doctrine may, nonetheless, be undone by the Iran affair, by the zealoury of those who acted secretly and perhaps illegally just months before Congress had come to open military support for the major anti-Communist insurgencies. Congress, it seems, will have its revenge. If so, those about to defund the Reagan

Senate investigators are itching to extract testimony from balky witnesses by giving them limited immunity from prosecution. Mr. Walsh argues that haste to immunize could jeopardize his cases. His signals of caution deserve respect - but so does the public's need to get the facts from the broader congressional investigations. The obvious answer is a compromise, but one weighted toward disclosure. Don't wallow in Watergate, some people urged 15 years ago, fearing partisan loss. To wallow in Iran new would risk putting public confidence in government on hold for a perilously long time.

Some senators would like to force testimony as early as next month from John Poindexter and Oliver North, the former National Security aides. Mr. Walsb wants at least three more months to gather evidence for any subsequent criminal prosecution. Vice Admiral Poindexter and Lieutenant Colonel North have refused to testify, citing their constitutional privilege against self-incrimination. The Senate and House committees have the power to demand their testimony, under court orders forbidding its use against them. To prove that his ing litigation and persuade witnesses and targets to cooperate. Excessive delay, meanwhile, could open the Democratic Congress to charges of stalling in order to keep the White House under a cloud.

There is not yet so stark a choice. The questions to balance at the moment are how much time the committees can afford to allow Mr. Walsb vs. bow much important new evidence be can turn up if he has more time. With a little give on both sides, and great care in handling the witnesses when they are immunized, Congress and Mr. Walsh can both accomplish their vital tasks. But if many more weeks pass, Congress will have to choose between informing itself and the public, and preserving Mr. Walsh's prosecution options. At that point, having already given Mr. Walsh four months or more, it will have to choose the informing function of open bearings.

Bad Publicity in Prague

To describe the long-delayed political trial now under way in Prague as involving five jazz men is both misleading and belitthing. It suggests that the state is slapping down an irresponsible bandful of bearded youngsters with clarinets and trumpets. In fact the show trial is designed to intimidate respected and senior figures in the counterestablishment and to destroy one of the country's few independent cultural forums.

The five were leading officials of the jazz section of the Musicians' Union until the authorities disbanded it in October 1984. The section had turned itself into a vehicle for promoting exactly the sort of subversive arts which the Stalinists who crushed the Prague spring of 1968 found intolerable. The charges against the group are fraud and, an Orwellian touch, the unlicensed communication of ideas.

Until the emergence of the new Soviet leader, things were easy for the Czechoslovakian rulers. They kept fight control over, all forms of political and cultural dissent. Now Mikhail Gorbachev speaks approvingly of the mildly revisionist regimes in Hungary and Poland, and appears to en-courage the very "openness" which Prague finds subversive. Like the attacks upon Jewisb dissidents in Moscow, the current purge trial is bad public relations.

Tom Wicker argues that the deployment of U.S. medium-range missiles by European governments was "impopular with their peoples" and that the irend is now reversed by fears of "decoupling." Both claims are misleading.

The first confuses European public opinion with the clamorous rantings of an anti-American unilateralist minority; and the second underestimates the extent to which bilateral reductions which leave intact the independent West European deterrents are welcomed by many Europeans --- such as the majorities that

She Never Felt Detached From Either Place

PARIS - Maria Jolas, who died here last week at 94, was not only one of the last survivors, if not the last, of the loyal group of friends around James Joyce in Paris and a busy participant in the golden age of Americans in Paris, literary and otherwise. She was an energetic activist over a wide spectrum of life for Americans abroad during virtually all of the almost 60 years she lived here. In the 1960s, for instance, Mrs. Jolas was secretary of the Paris American Committee to Stop War, an organization of U.S. citizens opposed to the American involvement in Vietnam. She translated "The French Student Uprising," a sympathetic account of the social unheaval of 1968. She was a founder of the Société Européenne de Culture, with a purpose of keeping East-West cultural lines of communication open despite the Cold War. Last year she was made a chevalier in the Legion d'Honneur.

"I never felt I was an expatriate, I never felt I was an exile, I never felt detached from my country or from this one," she said at a 1964 round table on Americans in Paris, at which participants included Janet Flanner, longtime Paris correspondent of The New Yorker, artist and photographer Man Ray, composer Virgil Thomson and writer James Jones. A tall, handsome woman with a mass of well-groomed white hair, Mrs. Jolas impressed an interviewer when well into r 80s with ber air of "radiant good health and vitality." A daughter, Betsy Jolas, a composer and professor at the Conservatoire de Paris, said she was "active and interested in everything, in touch with the world" to the end.

But mainly it is the Joycean connection; her role with her husband, Eugene Jolas, in publishing the literary quarterly called transition (spelled with a small t "to bait the critics," she once guipped) and her activity as a translator into English - notably of the stylistically com-plex novels of Nathalie Sarraute - that defined the literary side of her life.

In her memoirs, Sylvia Beach. founder of the celebrated bookstore Shakespeare and Company in rue de

The arrival of Maria and Eugene Jolas in the mid-20s "helped make Joyce's parties very lively." she wrote, adding that loyce was "enraptured" with Maria Jolas's voice and ber repertory of American songs. One that he kept requesting was titled "Farewell Titanic." Mrs. Jolas, who was born Maria Mc-Donald in Louisville, Kentucky, in January 1893, came to Europe to study singing, first in Berlin in 1913, then after the war in Paris. Kay Boyle, James Agee and Hart Crane The review also published sections of Joyce's "Work in Progress," which eventually became "Finnegan's Wake," a book for which Mrs. Jolas corrected proofs. Indeed, Betsy recalls her mother as a general factotum for the review. performing whatever tasks, literary or otherwise, had to be done.

Early on, the Jolases moved to the country in search of more working space. For a while they lived in of Coombey-les-Deux-Eglises in a big house that years later became the home of Charles de Gaulle. The rent in Colombey was $160 a year, Maria Jolas re-called in 1964. "It was cheap and peaceful and a good place to edit a magazine."

The Jolases were among those who often helped the impoverished Joyce and his family. After the war, Mrs. Jolas rescued Joyce's papers and possessions from an attic in Montparnasse. "We all read transition." recalled Virgil Thomson, the composer and critic and another adoptive Parisian of the period. He remembered Mrs. Jolas as a pleasant, jolly Kentucky woman."

I wasn't thick with the rue de rOdéon crowd," Mr. Thomson - two of whose operas were written to librettos by Gertrude Stein - said the other day in a telephone interview from his New York home. Within the relatively small circle of American artists and intellectuals in Paris, "the Joyce club was not the Stein club," he said. "I don't think Maria Jolas ever liked or really got along with Gertrude Stein," he observed, adding that he thought it was perhaps less a literary matter than a question of "two strong-minded women.

In 1930 Mrs. Jolas founded the Ecole Bilingue in Neuilly, whose student body included her daughters, Betsy and Tina, who is now an anthropologist and trans-lator living in Provence. The school lasted until the Nazi invasion, when she evacuated some of its students to a chateau in south central France, In America during the war, she and her husband worked for the Office of War Information. Mrs. Jolas established a home for French sailors in New York and organized such things as a Bastille Day celebration in the streets of Manhattan,

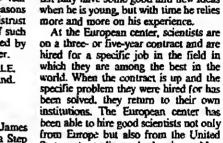

She was buried Saturday alongside her busband, who died in 1952, in the village of Cherence, north of Paris, where they had a summer home.

SCIENCE

Superconductor Technology Promises New Electricity Era

By James Gleick New York Times Service S CIENTISTS on three continents are racing to achieve one of the great dreams of science — an everyday material that carries electricity without the slightest loss of energy. Until now, such materials, superconductors, have existed only in the esoteric reaches of low-temperature physics, a few degrees above absolute zero. But a series of announcements over the last week around the United States have raised the prospect of a superconductor that could work at room temperature.

In magnets, wires or electronic devices, a room-temperature superconductor would bold the power to transform technology on a scale unseen since the advent of the transistor. As a result, the pace of discovery has accelerated to a feverish level at research laboratories of the United States, Europe and Asia.

There's never been anything like this," said Alex Zettl of the University of California at Berkeley, one of many physicists announcing milestones. "People are working full steam, every day everyone is calling all the other groups, and because of that things are advancing even faster. It's an absolute avalanche effect."

Some applications are already in sight ---from smaller, faster computers to storage of electricity in huge magnetic coils. Even when they speak of high-speed trains levitated by magnets or electric motors shrunk to one-unth normal size, many scientists believe they bave barely begun to imagine the most far-reaching uses of a room-temperature superconductor.

Because existing superconductors re-quire extreme cold, their usefulness has been limited.

For more than a decade, the barrier seemed to be 23 kelvins, or degrees centigrade above absolute zero. (Zero on the Kelvin scale is minus 273 degrees Centigrade and minus 460 degress Fahrenheit.) Recently scientists have broken through to . levels of 30, 39, and then 52 under artificially high pressure

Then - amid a flurry of patent applicantists tioos and announcements - scie found a material that starts the transition to superconductivity at 98 kelvins. The last few days bave brought a rapid sequence of developments:

• Yet another compound displayed fluctuations indicating possible superconduc-tivity at about 240 kelvins, less than 40 degrees Fahrenheit below zero, according to separate groups at the University of Houstoo and the University of California at Berkeley. Room temperature is about 295 kelvins.

The going to be a record tomorrow. barrier to high-temperature superconductivity fell on Jan. 27, 1986. The breakthrough came in an unexpected kind of material -a small, dark chunk of ceramic, an oxide instead of a metal alloy. Ordinari-ly, oxides are insulators, especially poor conductors of electricity, and most researchers in superconductivity were looking elsewhere.

But two scientists at the IBM Zurich then almost 60. thought oxides were promising. For three years they had been mixing powders, baking them in hot ovens to make new compounds and chilling them to see if they would lose their resistance to electricity. Dr. Bednorz read in a French journal about a new oxide, combining barium with lantbanom, copper and oxygen. The French scientists who discovered the compound were primarily chemists, and they never tested it for superconductivity. "That's the amazing thing," said Richard Greene of IBM's Watson Research Center in Yorktown Heights, New York.

"Anybody in the field of superconductivity should have been aware of this French work and should have measured these materials."

But the Zurich scientists suspected that the material might be just what they had been seeking. And on Jan. 27, they discov-• A radical new theory of the physics of ered that electrical resistance plummeted at about 30 kelvins. After three years, they felt as much relief as triumph. "Each time I their colleagues, even at IBM. "We wanted to measure as much as possible without being pressed by competitors," Dr. Bednorz said. Researchers who read the Zurich results after they appeared in September took two paths. They tried to reproduce the results, making the same material and looking for explanations of its unexpected properties. And they tried to change the recipe, hoping to find variations that would work at even higher temperatures. By December, the competition was intensifying. Groups in China and Japan saw the challenge. At the University of Houston, C.W. Chu had already worked on oxides and studied the ability of high pressures to encourage superconductivity. So he squeezed the new material with thousands of times the pressure of the atmosphere. When be measured the temperature at which the transition to superconductivity began, he found that he was able to achieve first 40 kelvins, then 50 and

Dr. William E. Kunkel, scientific director of Las Campanas Observatory near La Serena, regards the new Supernova Shelton 1987, the closest to Earth since 1604, as an event as significant to ordinary people as it is to scientists. It is a potential creator of chemical building blocks, stars, solar systems, even life. Astronomers believe most of Earth's substance came into being as byproducts of supernovas similar to Shelton 1987.

AIDS Dispute Is Nearing Resolution

NEW YORK (NYT) — A dispute over scientific credit in AIDS research appears to be nearing a settlement that will recognize French and American claims, both sides said recently.

The Pasteur Institute in Paris has been battling representatives of the National Cancer Institute over patent approval on tests for infection with the AIDS virus. Dr. Luc Montagnier of Pasteur first discovered the virus; Dr. Robert C. Gallo at the cancer institute later isolated the same virus, and asserts that his laboratory first demonstrated unequivocably the role of the virus in causing AIDS. The suit, filed in 1985, seeks to determine control of millions of dollars in royalties from AIDS antibodies tests.

NEW YORK (NYT) - Researchers at Hebrew University of Jerusalem have identified a natural sweetener that actually deters dental cavities from forming.

The substance is glycynthizin, a natural sweetener 50 times sweeter than sucrose. Although it is derived from the liconice plant, it does not have the taste of licorice. The researchers say it could lead to more effective toothpaste and to a new sugar substitute.

Microorganisms in the mouth, especially streptococcos mutans, transform sucrose sugar into sticky substances that enable harmful bacteria to adhere to teeth and form dental plaque has shown that glycynhizin inhibits the growth of these microorganisms while not harming the growth of the beneficial oral bacterial liora.

WALL STREET WATCH

The Market's 'Technicians' Sense a Correction Ahead

By VARTANIC C. VARTAN New York Times Service

EW YORK -- Most technical analysts believe that the Dow Jones industrial average — after climbing past 2,000, 2,100 and 2,200 so far this year — is poised to scale the next century mark of 2,300. But others sniff a possible correction in the air. After weathering a 20-point drop on Monday, the Dow caught its second wind Tuesday and advanced 19.97 points, to 2,280.09, only a whisker below Friday's record closing at 2,280.23.

One prominent technician, Robert R. Prechter Jr. of Gaines ville, Georgia, has repeatedly told subscribers to his advisory letter that he expects the Dow to move above 2,300 "before we see anything worthy of the name correction." Once that level is reached, he suggested, a "swift and short" reaction in stock prices would be likely. Mr. Prechter said Friday about the market evening on his "hot line" telephone service for short-term rally as positive for traders that "breadth, volume and rate-of-change statistics stock prices. all suggest that a correction is approaching in the stock market." These technical indicators relate to the internal dynamics of the stock market. In an interview Tuesday, however, he emphasized his bullish long-term outlook for equity prices. "For 90 percent of market participants," he said, "the most intelligent thing to do is to stay fully invested." Mr. Prechter publishes The Elliott Wave Theorist, whose essential principle holds that stock prices move up and down in distinct waves to complete any single bull or bear market. He sees the industrial average topping out between 3,600 and 3,700 next year. In late February, when the Dow was at 2,240, Richard Eakle of Morgan Stanley & Co. turned negative in his short-term opinion of the market. "The stampede to own stocks since the beginning of the year has accelerated to a point where the market now appears ripe for a periodic shakeout," he said.

He cited as particularly troublesome the widening gap between the Dow and its 200-day moving average, which represents an accumulation of prices over this period. He likened this gap to a rubber band that was stretched too far, an indication that in his opinion, the advancing market was due for a pullback.

OBERT J. NUROCK of Paoh, Pennsylvania, author of The Astute Investor, an advisory publication, believes that a Dow target of 2,369 to 2,386 "by late March or early April is viable." He reaches these specific figures by using stock charts and repetitive cycles.

Aside from the internal dynamics of the market, technical analysts peer into the future with the use of "sentiment" indicators related to investor psychology. Mr. Nurock, for example, employs a set of sentiment indicators, based on changes in trading patterns of stock-index options, to gauge near-term market movements. Inasmuch as these indicators continue to reflect investor skepticism about the durability of the market rally, he construes this as a positive for stock prices.

Joseph A. Feshbach of Prudential-Bache Securities has developed a somewhat related type of sentiment indicator. "The unusual aspect of this market environment," he said, "is that extreme optimism about the long-term secular case continues to coexist with a short-term psychology of caution." Thus, as long as the short-term mood of the investment community is oriented to a coming correction, he remains bullish. Mr. Feshbach's target is for the Dow to reach 2,400 by the end of April and 2,500 by the close of May. Once the market's shortterm mentality switches to outright bullishness, he envisages trouble for stock prices. Laszlo Birinyi Jr. of Salomon Brothers has esti because of the market's momentum and neutral sentiment readings, the Dow has the potential to rise to the 2,415 level. However, he does not place this forecast within a particular time frame.

Saudi Banking System Ensnared in a Cycle of Decline

By Peter T. Kilborn couple of more years. New York Times Service RIYADH - Saudi Arabia's banks, wildly profitable a few years ago, are ensnared in a cycle of decline brought on by the fall in oil prices of recent years and by religious laws that once worked in their favor, according to bankers and government officials.

"There's a dysfunction in the banking system right now," said a Western expert in Saudi finance, who declined to be identified. "Banks are not lending anymore. They're trying to clean up the mess they're in.' Lending for real estate, con-

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches WASHINGTON - The U.S. balance-of-payments deficit in merchandise trade swelled to a record $38.37 billion in the fourth quarter of 1986, pushing the year's deficit to an unprecedented rise in non-petroleum products. $147.71 billion, the Commerce Department reported Wednesday. It said that the fourth-quarter deficit widened by 3.3 percent from the $37.15 billion deficit posted in the third quarter.

The merchandise trade imbalance for the entire year was 19 percent wider than the $123.62 billion deficit registered in 1985. The new report confirmed earlier figures that estimated the U.S. merchandise trade deficit at $41.9 billion in the fourth quarter and $169.8 billion for the year.

The Associated Press

TOKYO --- Japanese automakers have agreed to hold monthly exports to the European Community to about 95,000, last year's level, to reduce crincism over trade imbalances, the Nihon Keizai Shimbun newspaper said Wednesday. The newspaper said the auto-makers had been asked by the Ministry of International Trade and Industry to agree to export limits. An official of the ministry's Automobile Division said MITI has asked Japanese automakers in make "orderly exports" to the EC. but he declined to elaborate. Japan, which began limiting its car exports to the U.S. market in fiscal 1981 under strong pressure from Washington and from the shimping American auto indusiry, decided to continue the restrictions again in fiscal 1987, which begins April 1, in light of rising protectionism in the U.S. Congress. NEW YORK - American Express Co. has unveiled a card that offers revolving credit, providing an alternative to its traditional charge card and ending months of industry speculation. Unlike other American Express cards, the "Optima" card introduced Tuesday will allow holders to pay only a portion of their Mr. Cliff is president of Seagram monthly balance. Optima will become available in May at an annual fee of $15 to American Express card holders who have been members in good standing for at least one year. With the relatively low interest rate of 13.5 percent at the outset, it is expected to compete with Visa and MasterCard. Politicians and consumer groups have been complaining about the high interest rates, averaging 18 percent, charged by major credit card issuers. Major banks have started to compete in recent months by lowring rates

Citicorp, the largest U.S. issuer of Visa and MasterCard cards, recently cut rates from 19.8 to 16.8 percent. Industry analysts said they believed that Optima might promote that trend. Some analysts said they believed that American Express was introducing the card to prevent its customers from switching to bank credit cards that increasingly have offered services similar to its own.

Icahn Is Seen as Reaching Too Far in His Grab for USAir

By Agis Salpukas New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Carl C. Icahn may have overreached in his effort to acquire USAir Group Inc. and may find it difficult to end the bid without paying a price - financially and possibly legally - some analysts and sources close to the takeover effort say.

Mr. Icahn, a takeover specialist who is the chairman and principal owner of Trans World Airlines, was busy meeting with his legal and financial advisers this week, reassessing whether he should continue his takeover battle.

In the latest obstacle to the bid, the U.S. Justice Department said Wednesday that it is reviewing whether Mr. Icahn and TWA violated antitrust law by failing to seek advance FRANKFURT - Currency dealers said here Wednesday that it was uncertain what shape the Volkswagen currency deal took, but they provided a general portrait of how a swindle would likely likely to occur.

It would have been prudent in 1985, when Volkswagen says the swindle probably took place and when the dollar was worth about 3 Deutsche marks, for Volkswagen to protect the mark value of its export earnings with a forward contract hedging against the fall of the dollar, which is now worth about 1.87 DM.

Someone out to defraud an exporting company in 1985 could have bet on the dollar continuing upward. He might have then faked documents to satisfy management that a some form of hedge had been undertaken, then sat back to wait for the dollar to go above the price stipulated in the faked contract.

He would aim to pocket the difference when the receipts were booked at the contract rate. But the fraud would be discovered if the dollar fell and management found its dollar receipts worth much less in Deutsche marks than planned.

Volkswagen, with group sales in 1985 of 52 billion DM, of which more than two-thirds were exports, does a huge volume of foreign exchange business, involving 20 or 30 banks, dealers said. "With the sort of volume they're dealing with, it would be easy to Forward contracts, currency options, swaps and other such instrunents are typical forms of protection against currency fluctuations for companies such as Volkswagen that are shifting one currency to another, for instance in transferring revenue from exports into its home currency.

In a forward contract, a company agrees with its bank to buy or sell a certain amount of foreign currency at a set point in the future for a fixed rate. That rules out the possibility of windfall currency profits, but also of losses.

A subtler approach is a currency option. This gives the company the right, but not the obligation, to buy or sell the foreign currency ar a fixed rate in the future. The company pays a premium for the option, as for an insurance policy. If rates move favorably, it will throw away the option and benefit from the currency opportunities.

ON BOXING

I Fit betrays a bias on my part to be surprised at the combination of Joyce Carol Oates and the subject of boxing, I can only plead what she herself writes in this penetrating book on the subject: "Boxing is a purely masculine activity and it inhabits a purely masculine world. Boxing is for men, and is about men, and is men. A celebration of the lost religion of mascalimity all the more trenchant for its being lost."

Yet to judge from the few autobiographical remarks she lets drop in her remarkable book. Oates has been a fan of boxing most of her life. Her father took her to a Golden Gloves tonnament in Buffalo, New York, in the early 1950s, and it's evident she watched the Friday night matches that were televised in the early 1960s: Certainly she's at home with the subject. Though she refers to "On Boxing" as "mosaiclike," it more resembles a spiral, touching his-tory, lore and anecdote as it circles in on the essential, and disquieting, issues that lie at the heart of boxing. She reminds us that in the bare-knuckle era that preceded the development of gloves, it was the fighters' hands that kept breaking, not their heads.

She makes the point that, due to the greater authority that the referee has assumed recently, "the bloody 'great' fights of boxing's histo--Jack Dempsey's triumph over Jess Willard in 1919, for instance, or Sugar Ray Robinson's sixth and final fight with Jake LaMotta in 1951 --- would be "inconceivable" today.

But this is a good deal more than a book that establishes its author's credentials to "talk boxing." Though no defense of prizefighting, it er's intransigent flesh. The body's dialogue with its shadow-self - or Death. Baseball, football, basketball - these quintessentially American pastimes are recognizably sports because they involve play: they are games. One plays football, one doesn'l play boxing." Unsurprisingly enough the one activity she compares with boxing is the craft of writing, at least so far as the fighter's training is involved, or the "fanatic subordination of the self in terms of a wished-for destiny." She writes: "One might compare the time-bound public spectacle of the boxing match (which could be as brief as an ignominious 45 seconds — the record for a title fight!) with the publication of a writer's book. That which is 'public' is but the final stage in a protincted, ardious, grading, and framently description period of pressive and frequently despairing period of prepara-speaks eloquently about the fascination of watching two human beings hit each other in the ring. "How can you enjoy so brutal a sport, people sometimes ask me," she writes. "And it's ioo complex to answer. In any case I don't

'enjoy' boxing in the usual sense of the word, and never have; boxing isn't invariably 'bru-tal'; and I don't think of it as a 'sport.'"

"There is nothing fundamentally playful about it, nothing that seems to belong to day-light, to pleasure," she continues later, "At its moments of greatest intensity it seems to con-tain so complete and so powerful an image of life — life's beauty, vulnerability, despan, in-calculable and often self-destructive courage tion." "Indeed," she continues. "one of the reasons" 4 for the habitual attraction of serious writers to boxing . . . is the sport's systematic cultivation of pain in the interests of a project, a life-goal: the willed transposing of the sensation we know as pain (physical, psychological, emo-tional) into its polar opposite. If this is masochism - and I doubt that it is, or that it is simply the constant re-establishment of the parameters of one's being." Yet less she be accused of romanticizing the fight game, it should quickly be added that she also compares it to pomography --- the willful "violation of a taboo" --- although "boxing, unlike pornography, is not theatrical . . . it is altogether real: the blood shed, the damage suffered, the pair (usually suppressed or sublimated) are unfeigned."

There is nothing about "On Boxing" that attempts to redeem its subject. Its most eloauthinpis to reactin its autoret. Its most av-quent passages are damning in one way or another. "Yet," as Oates concludes, "we don't give up on boxing, it isn't that easy. Perhaps it's like tasting blood. Or, more discreetly put, love from major continental club tournaments will continue at least through next season.

The Union of European Foot-ball Associations said after a meeting of its executive commit-tee on Tuesday that the panel "decided by majority to wait an-other year in order to observe developments," a statement said. Top English soccer officials came to the session to present a list of measures against fan violence, hoping to persuade UEFA at least to set a date for ending the ban.

English clubs were barred from the three main European tourna-ments (the Champions', Cup ments (the Champions', Cup Winners' and UEFA Cups) after the 1985 Heysel Stadium disaster in Brussels, where riots mostly blamed on English fans caused the death of 39 people at the Champions' Cup final between Liverpool and Inventus of Turin. Carter called the decision "a big disappointment," especially because of what he termed UE-FA's lack of a firm commitment. "We thought there was a 50-50 chance of them accepting us back future, but this bland statement really doesn't."

An official who took part in the committee's private deliberations said a proposal to allow two qual-ifying English clubs back into Eu-ropean competition next season was rejected 8-3. He spoke on condition of anonymity. "Nothing has changed," said committee member Heinz Geroe of Anstria. "The measures by the FA and league concern domestic games. The question is how the Frenchman Jacques Georges, UEFA's president, said there have been thousands of soccerrelated arrests in England since the ban. "If we come down to 50, that'll be good."

Carter expressed regret that the UEFA statement did not appeal to the British government to help soccer authorities in the fight against fan violence.

Passport Controls Out

Britain's sports minister on Wednesday ruled out any chance of the government's seizing passports of soccer fans who cause trouble overseas, The Associated Press reported from London. Richard Tracey said there were oo plans to seize passports of troublemakers, one move their had been suggested by UEFA and other soccer governing bod-ies. "The government will not take away passports, if that is what UEFA is asking for," he said. This has been agreed by all parties in the House of Com-mons."

ports were only taken away when people had been charged with an offense and released on bail. "In any other case it is believed that this would be an infringement of civil rights.

Tracey also pointed out that the Treaty of Rome, signed by Britain and other members of the Common Market, guarantees free movement for citizens among Enropean countries.

VANTAGE POINT/ Ira Berkow Throwing the Book at the Professor

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Several years ago, Bobby Knight, the basketball professor, dictated to his secretary a letter to the sports editor of a daily newspaper with whom he had a beef. The language in the letter was not the kind one normally uses to write home with. Nor was it the kind generally associated with a college educator — or any educator this side of a first sergeant

There is nothing wrong with profanity when done in the right time and place, and if crafted creatively. Sometimes it's even balm for the soul. As Mr. Clemens once noted, "When angry, count four; when very angry, swear." Now, a professor, even a basketball professor, has, it is assumed, certain responsibilities.

There is confirmation in spades - example after detailed example - of Knight's ferocious temper, bullying, tyrannical behavior with his players, his coaches, even his good friends, and a violent nature that at times erupts.

One is to demonstrate, if oot sensitivity, then at least civility.

In many cases - the letter to the sports chior being the least of them — it seems that Professor Knight, whose Indiana University team plays Fairfield Thursday night in the first round of the National Collegiate Athletic Asso-ciation tournament in Indianapolis, oversteps his bounded his bounds.

"He would swear at you in practice, use the vilest language, and oot to help you as a basket-

The former player asked that his name not be used for fear that Knight could still wield hurt-ful influence in his life, and that he might be singled out as one who "kissed and told." The former player, however, substantiated the ac-tions and words and tantrums and barbs with which Knight goes about his job as basketball coach at Indiana, and which are clearly delineated in the current No. 1 ponfiction best seller in the nation, "A Season on the Brink: A Year with Bob Knight and the Indiana Hoosiers."

This powerful and convincing book was writ-ten by John Feinstein, a Washington Post sports columnist who took a leave of absence to spend the 1985-86 season with Knight. He was given musual access to Knight, and to such generally closed-donr areas as his practice sessions and his pre- and post-game private mo-DCG15.

Nothing in the book is altogether new to Nothing in the book is altogether new to those who have followed Knight's career, but there is confirmation in spades —example after detailed example — of Knight's ferocions tem-per, bullying, tyrannical behavior with his play-ers, his coaches, even his good friends, and a violent nature that at times erupts.

For all the world to see, he has grabbed and shaken Isiah Thomas, when Thomas was a freshman at Indiana hut playing for Knight oo the U.S. team in the Pan-Am Games in Puerto Rico, and he has lost control of his temper and flung a chair across a basketball court after a referee's call went against him. .

From Feinstein, now, we learn of a freshman who was playing defense in practice. Knight was going to demonstrate a passing technique; the eager freshman intercepted the professor's pass. When he did it again, the professor passed the ball squarely into the freshman's face. Accithe ball squarely into the freshman's race. Acci-dent? They ran the play again, and again the freshman caught the pass squarely in the face. Another time, according to Feinstein, Knight hteraily kicked a player in the hutt across the basketball court. The player had recently un-dergone a back operation.

doesn't pay players under the table, a practice not unknown in college circles. And he insists that the players go to class.

All of that appears true, and is laudatory, but there is something else intrinsic in the ideals of college sports: Playing ought to be fun. In the curriculum guides, basketball is nothing more than an extracurricular acovity, along the lines
